Teacher remarks for students report card

My 8th grader was worried about one of his scores for a few weeks. I told him that he needed to talk to his teacher and see what he could do to bring it up, but obviously, he didn't. It was the day before the class was closed when he came to me after school. I could not fail! I want to be able to play baseball! (He fears an F will make him ine qualify.) Oh, that's right! And beyond baseball, you may not be able to get your signed work papers. (He had a summer job queuing.) Aw, he slumped, defeated. Apparently, the F he gets on his report card can really make a mess of things for him. I wondered if I should talk to the teacher about it. There's a lot at stake! Usually, I'm not a fixer. So why, in this case I would consider intervening? Firstly, my son's failed subject is not a subject. It's a band. How do you fail the band? When I asked him what the scoring criteria were, he told me there were homework that he didn't do. But you never bring the instrument home. I can't take it on the bus. (He plays a baritone horn. It's really big.) But you never asked me to ride. Mom, that's stupid. No one else has to ride to bring their instruments to and from school. He's got a reason. In a way, this is big tool discrimination. While I work from home and can probably arrange to drive him, should I be expected? What if I have a job in the office? Secondly, it's not like he can't play instruments. He had a solo in the last concert and he and his part mate (also getting an F, as I understand) are only two baritones in the whole band, and significant contributors. Shouldn't the event that a) he has musical instruments every time the band meets (because it really belongs to school and never leaves the band room) and b) can he play it tip the scales a little in his favor? (These are, in fact, two other scoring criteria.) Maybe I'll just quit the band! My son chose not to join the band and instead signed up for drama at the end of 7th grade, but somehow when the schedule appeared at the beginning of this school year - surprise! - there's a band. So finally, how should an option, that my son does not even want to lose in the first place, held against him? Quit would be the easy solution, but I don't think it's the right one. This is an opportunity for me to reinforce the idea that even if we think the rules are stupid, we still have to abide by them unless we can negotiate peacefully and sensibly an exception or amendment. This is also an opportunity for me to help my son have a responsibility to communicate with his teacher in a mature way. I helped him manually an email asking if he could do the post late and still get some credit and whether he can make them at school. I showed him how to copy his guidance advisor. I told him I would pick him up from school if he wanted to do it the next day, before class closed. Much to his disappointment, he did not hear back slowly What am I going to do? I'm not sure, hon. You can get an F. But if you work out a plan to get future exercises done, you shouldn't have any problem getting an A in term 3. After that, the baseball trials will take place after the 4th semester starts, so I think you'll be fine. Do I believe my son should have a special time to do his homework at school? Well. Apart from the fact that he can't easily get home stuff, it's school property and I don't really want liability. Do I believe that the F on the report card should be changed? I'm not sure. I believe it can be changed if the band teacher is willing to compromise, but my son and I discussed the fact that it was the teacher's choice about whether or not he bent the rules. Do I ask the teacher to change the score? No, but I am willing to help my son negotiate a future solution that suits both him and the teacher. Learning how to resolve this conflict is just one of many bricks in the foundation of my son's ability to be a fully functional adult when it is time to leave the nest. Student teachers are often placed in a dilemma and stress, not really sure of their competence and sometimes not even placed with veteran teachers who get much help. These tips can help teachers as they begin their first teaching exercise. These are not suggestions on how to approach students but instead how to be the most effective in your new teaching environment. On time is very important in the 'real world'. If you arrive late, you will definitely NOT start with your right foot with your cooperative teacher. Even worse, if you arrive after a class has started that you are supposed to be taught, you are putting that teacher and yourself in a dilemma. As a teacher, you are a professional and you are supposed to dress accordingly. There is nothing wrong with overdressing in your student teaching exercises. Clothes help you borrow an air of authority, especially if you babysit. Moreover, your outfit allows the coordinating teacher to know about your professionalism and dedication to your mission. Remember that teachers in coordination have pressures placed on them just as you have your own pressures to cope. If you usually only teach 3 classes and the coordinating teacher asks you to take classes for an extra day because he has an important meeting to attend, consider this your opportunity to have more experience while impressing with your dedication to the teacher your coordination. This may seem obvious to some people but it's important that you don't violate school rules. For example, if it is against the rules to chew gum in the classroom, then do not chew it yourself. If the campus is 'smoke-free', don't light up during your lunch. You, definitely unsym professional and will be a sign against you when it comes time for your co-ord or school teachers to report on your abilities and actions. If you know you'll need copies for a lesson, don't wait until the morning of the lesson to get them done. Many schools have procedures to follow in order for copying to occur. If you do not follow these procedures, you will be stuck without copies and will probably look unsym professional at the same time. This is especially important if you believe you will stay in the area and can try for a job at the school where you are teaching. These people's opinions about you will have an impact on whether you are hired or not. They can also make your time in the process of teaching students much easier to handle. Don't underestimate their value. Keep in mind that if you're taking notes on students or classroom experience to turn yourself in to scores, you shouldn't use their names or change them to protect their identity. You never know who you're teaching or what their relationship might be with your instructor and coordinator. It may be tempting to go out in the teacher lounge and enjoy rumors about fellow teachers. However, as a student teacher, this would be a very dangerous option. You can say something you may regret later. You can find out which information is untrue and cloud your judgment. You can even offend someone without recognizing it. Remember, these are teachers you can work with again some day in the future. Do not interrupt other teachers' classes for no good reason. When you are talking to your coordinator or other teachers on campus, treat them with respect. You can learn a lot from these teachers, and they will be more likely to share with you if they feel that you really care about them and their experiences. You will probably get sick at some point during your student teaching and will need to stay home during the day. You must remember that regular teachers will have to take over the classroom during your absence. If you wait until the last minute to call in, this can leave them in an cymed bind that makes them look bad for the students. Call as soon as you believe you won't be able to make it to class. Last updated on November 4, 2020 Self-improvement is not a major change of mind; it can really be simple steps to improve what you've got to help you get where you want to be. However, what you will need is consistency, determination and deliberate to try some things that will last and challenge you. Instead of setting your vision way out into the future, which leaves you feeling like you'll never make it, you can start to follow simple and effective self-improvement steps today. So if you want to make an immediate impact on your life and be ready to act, then continue reading—you'll love these!1. Be ready to work hard. As with anything in life, if you do something you've got to work hard to get it. This does not mean that you burn candles at both ends, leaving you exhausted and leaving your personal life in ruins. It just means that when you want something bad enough, you'll put in time to get there. Action is important here and the more 'inspired' the action, the better the end result.2. Make sure you have friends who you can talk to. Load sharing is as important as with any self-improvement. If you can communicate with others and get feedback on how you're doing, that's great. We all need 'cheerleaders' in our corners to keep us going when times get tough, but you also need to have people who will tell you how it is even if you don't want to hear it. So make sure you have a good support network around you, especially those with opinions you respect.3. Adapt to your situation rather than think too much. Sometimes, we can reach a difficult stage. Maybe you have lost your job or your partner has left you. Instead of analyzing the situation, learn to adapt to your situation and accept them as they are. It's not about making your circumstances into some kind of drama; Remember, what you focus on is expansion which means you'll get more of it. Then you do not become your problem and you will feel much less burdened by them.4. Make sure you use your time wisely. Time is of the essence, some might say, while others will say that time is an illusion. One thing we do know is that you have a life on this planet, so the way you use that time is extremely important. So how can you use your time wisely? Only you know how to do it, but look at how you currently spend your day: you sit working all day, go home, eat and then sit slumped in front of the TV for the rest of the evening? Your time on this earth is precious, so isn't time to make use of the time you've left? Try something new, go for a walk, learn a new language or meditate, but make sure it's something you absolutely love.5. Always consistent. A great way to improve yourself is to change the way you work. For example, with your friends, are you always one of those unreliable people bowing your head out of an arrangement just before it happens? Or are you someone who started a new exercise routine and then stopped doing it 3 weeks into it? Whatever it is and whatever you do, always consistent. When you make a commitment, stick to it. It will improve your life incredibly you will feel more confident and happier with yourself, especially because you will that whatever you solve, you will be able to always do it.6. Go find your place of happiness. No, I'm not saying places like in popping to your local bar or restaurant and gorging yourself on your favorite drinks or food. What I'm saying is to find out what you love to do, what makes you happy and go there. Your happy place is a place where you find peace where you lose yourself and feel satisfied. Meditation is a great way to find location; it brings you back to you and ensures that you always live in the present moment.7. Make sure you embrace all your emotions. In life you will find that it throws you some difficult challenges, sometimes it will bring out your fears and lead you into uncertainty, and other times it will be fun. It is important to embrace all the emotions that come up in your life, embrace them wholeheartedly and understand why they are there and then let them go. Try not to ignore or oppose them because remember what you resist, persist, so always embrace them.8. Always be prepared to step out of your comfort zone. The idea of stepping out of your comfort zone for some people can leave you paralyzed with fear; however for any changes in your life, your comfort zone will always have to be stepped out. It's not something big, like doing a sky dive or something like crazy. However, it's worthwhile to change something you used to be scared of, like going to your own cinema or eating at a sushi restaurant when thinking of trying raw fish that normally means you run for the hills. So try something new—it's not necessarily eccentric, but it must challenge you.9. Be there to help others. Whether it's helping a stranger on the street or a family member or a friend helping others or in their time of need, lending a helping hand is a great and simple self-improvement to make. For others not only in favor of the people you are helping, but also for yourself, it can give you a sense of purpose, contribute and also lose your mind about your own troubles and worries.10. Live in the present moment. An excellent self-improvement tool is to live in the present moment, to live in the present. It is in this moment that you will appreciate all that you have and see beauty in the simplest things. Heading your current circumstances and bringing your mind back to where it belongs will bring a happier way of life instead of constant anxiety or an emphasis on the past or future—both of which do not exist. Only the present moment exists. Once you get used to such life, you'll never want to go back!11. Learn something new. There is nothing as liberating as learning something new; it can lift both your confidence and self-esteem and give you a great reason to meet new people. If you continually build up your brain activity by learning something new all the time, you will feel on top of your game and want to share the knowledge you have learned. There is nothing quite so empowering as learning a new tool in life that can improve your friends' circles or raise confidence levels either. Reading is also a great way to help you learn something new.12. Exercise daily. This may seem like an obvious thing, but exercise is important not only for your health but also for your mental well-being. We all know that after exercise, the world can feel a brighter and more positive place, so why don't we do it more often? Exercise is not about getting the perfect body or losing weight; it's more about feeling good inside and out. With a healthy body comes a healthy mind, so let's start something today. Even if it's just a daily walk, it's better than staying on that couch, again.13. Go to new places, travel a little. I'm not saying that flying to some distant lands is forgotten, although you can if you want. It's more about going to new places and experiencing life outside your own backyard. Too many of us stay in one place too often. We just see the same people, the same street and do the same things every day. If you want to improve your life, get out there and see the world and what it can offer. You can start by going to a town or city you've never been to in your own country and checking out architecture, landscapes and people. Anything new is good, so get out there!14. Listen to music and dance uplifting. If there's one thing that can really improve your life and get you excited about it, it's listening to great uplifting music and dancing. When was the last time you really let go? Let it all hang loose and get into a piece of music and let yourself go? Dancing, like exercise, makes you feel great. It releases all sorts of emotions and can make you feel unbelievably good. Self-improvement is not all about serious things; it can be something as simple as finding new music, music that inspires you and makes you dance and have fun!15. Get up earlier than usual. This is the last one, and it's finally because it's one of those self-improvement tips that we all know is a good thing, but we seem to avoid it at all costs! If you think about it, the earliest part of the day is when your brain is most active because it has been turned off in the last 7 hours or so. So you don't think it's best to get all of the above done in the morning? Things like exercise, meditation and dancing, can all be done in the first part of the day. Take it from me: This early morning tool can really get your day started with a bang! Learn more about Self-improvementFeatured photo credit: Laura Chouette via unsplash.com unsplash.com
